THE SEVENTH NEW JERSEY REGIMENT

In the closing weeks of the Civil War, the Seventh Regiment as pictured in the accompanying diary of Chaplain Hamilton was a seasoned, battle-scarred unit. Above it is seen as it looked in an earlier, and probably happier, day—with a scant six months' service behind it, and three years of danger and hardship ahead. (Pencil drawing owned by the Society: "View of the Camp of the 7th Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, Lower Potomac, Maryland. Feb. 1862.")
